Brooklyn

Director: John Crowley

Brooklyn tells the story of Irish immigrant Eilis seeking opportunities in 1950s New York. After finding employment at a department store, Eilis overcomes her homesickness and falls in love. But when events force her to return to Ireland, she is faced with a heartbreaking choice between two lives. Unashamedly melodramatic and impeccably performed, this is a relatable story of a young woman defining her identity.

Talk about it
What do you associate with the term immigration? What motivates people to move to new countries?

Discussion points
- Why does Eilis move to America? What has changed about Ireland when she returns? Do you think she ultimately makes the right decision?
- What colours do you associate with the setting of America and Ireland in the film? What impression of place do these colours give you? Why do you think the way in which each place is represented changes?
- What different examples of immigrants do we see in the film? What are the differences between them? Think about Eilis’s experience and the men she serves at Christmas.
- How do Eilis’s letters home help structure the film? How do they help to interest the audience? What do they reveal about both characters? What is left unsaid?
